

My thoughts on home learning in lockdown 2021

I felt very unexcited about returning back to lockdown and doing schoolwork at home because there's no one to socialise with, nothing to sabotage and nothing very enjoyable about google meets and online work. When I was in lockdown, I noticed a difference when it came to my learning. Instead of receiving packs of work with nearly no help, I had to record our work in our books and had google meets to help me get through the lesson. It was also winter too, I was also allowed to play in the snow to enjoy myself. I preferred this year's learning rather than last year's because there was more help and support, work routine and how you don't feel so isolated. I enjoyed it as I had more time to play games since I often finished my work early but it became very boring after a few days. I felt lonely about not being allowed to spend time with friends and felt often alone - as if all the other people were on their own individual planets. I was confident about using Google classroom, as most of the time I had no problems with it. Other than that, it was very easy to navigate and use. I could submit my work easily.
